THIS CABLE IS SENSITIVE, BUT UNCLASSIFIED. NOT FOR INTERNET DISTRIBUTION.

11. (U) This cable is a roundup of recent political developments across northern Nigeria, including:

- Violence erupts in Bauchi
- Niger governor probes former governor Kure
- Kano Imam escapes assassination
- LGC elections spark political violence in Kano

12. (SBU) VIOLENCE ERUPTS IN BAUCHI: On December 11, violence erupted in Yelwa in north-eastern Bauchi state following the demolition of a mosque, allegedly by individuals affronted by the mosque's construction at a government secondary school.
In retaliation, Muslim youths reportedly destroyed churches, including the Pentecostal Redeemed Christian Church of God, and properties of Christian residents. Several persons were injured or killed and mosques were razed in the process.
Bauchi governor Isa Yuguda claimed the violence was politically motivated. Military were deployed to calm tensions and a curfew was imposed in the area. (Comment: While significant Christian minorities have long resided relatively peacefully in the predominantly-Muslim North, inter-religious violence has spiked several times over the past decade. Religion is often a catalyst for hostility, used by politicians and others to foment discord. End Comment.)

13. (U) NIGER GOVERNOR PROBES HIS PREDECESSOR: On December 10, Nigerian dailies reported former Niger state governor Abdulkadir Kure (of the People's Democratic Party, PDP) is facing investigation by Niger state authorities over his administration's management of state resources during his 1999-2007 tenure as governor. (Note: In September 2006, Kure's name appeared on the Economic and Financial Crimes Commission (EFCC) list of 31 governors under investigation for alleged corrupt practices, but he is not currently under investigation by the EFCC. End Note.)

14. (SBU) KANO IMAM ESCAPES ASSASSINATION: On December 2, Daily Trust newspaper reported that Ustaz Muhammad Abba, the chief imam of a newly-built Kano mosque, narrowly escaped assassination when armed men entered the mosque during sunset prayers. One man was apprehended while fleeing the incident.

(Comment: In April and July, two prominent Islamic scholars were killed by members of rival Muslim sects. This episode, however, was linked to disgruntled members of Abba's own mosque community, who sought to lead the congregation in place of Abba. Amidst a declining economy, and few employment opportunities for imams other than to lead congregations, competition to lead congregations, and consequently benefit from patronage, can be intense. As well, a significant platform of ideological influence for imams remains the mosque pulpit. End Comment.)

15. (SBU) LGC ELECTIONS SPARK POLITICAL VIOLENCE IN KANO: Violence marred the November 17 Local Government Council (LGC) elections across 15 of Kano state's 44 Local Government Areas (LGAs). The Kano chapter of the People's Democratic Party (PDP) alleged that the All Nigeria People's Party (ANPP), ruling party in the state, hired "thugs" to steal ballot boxes, intimidate voters, and "cause confusion" at polling stations. Six individuals were reportedly killed in the violence. Elections in 5 LGAs, including Bichi LGA (the home of PDP gubernatorial aspirant, now Minister of State for Commerce Ahmed Bichi) were canceled due to the violence. The Kano State Independent Electoral Commission announced the ANPP won 36 LGAs and the PDP won 3; official election results announced over state-controlled media differed from the results announced by private radio stations. (Note: The Constitution empowers state governments to conduct LGC elections and establish State Independent Electoral Commissions, which conduct elections. Seats on the LGCs, to which states disburse funds for education, health, and water services, are highly sought after as rewards for party loyalists and campaign supporters. End Note.)
